I. PROJECT DESCRIPTION AND METHODOLOGY

During the months of February through April, 2011, Environmental Corporation of America conducted background research and a photographic documentation field survey of Georgia Historic Resource No. 205114, Turpin Farmstead, as part of mitigation efforts related to the construction of a telecommunications tower located at 707 Fairview Road, Stockbridge, Henry County, Georgia. This written report provides a developmental history of the farmstead, focusing particularly on the property in the context of agriculture and farming in Henry County. A Memorandum of Agreement (FCC NEPA-00205), governing the mitigation by and between the Federal Communications Commission, the Georgia State Historic Preservation Office, and T-Mobile South, LLC was finalized June 7, 2010.

Background research, field survey, and photographic documentation were conducted by Michelle K. Taylor, MLA and Jamie Destefano, MS of Environmental Corporation of America. The preparation of this report was conducted by Ms. Taylor, MLA of ECA and Architectural Historian, Jaime L. Destefano, MS. Historical information pertaining to the general developmental history of the farmstead within the context of agriculture in Henry County was obtained through research at the Georgia Historic Preservation Division, Henry County Public Library, the University of Georgia's Digital Library of Georgia, the Henry County Probate Court, Tax Assessor, property owner interview and a general internet data search.

Following the background research, a field survey was conducted on the property. Each structure, site, and landscape feature associated with the farmstead (Resource No. 205114) was assigned an individual number and photographed. Interior and exterior photographs were taken (when possible) of each structure and building. Contextual photographs of the landscape within the property were also taken. Following the field survey, photographic documentation was prepared. The photographic documentation of the Turpin Farmstead was conducted in accordance with "Guidelines for Establishing a Photographic Permanent Archival Record." Archival CDs were prepared containing digital photographs in RAW Format as well as JPEG and TIFF. The photographic documentation supplements this report. Proof sheets and a photograph log are included in Attachment C.

The overall landscape and setting of the Turpin Farmstead reveal the various trends in agricultural practices occurring in Henry County from the mid-19th century to present, particularly those related to the cotton industry. The farmstead includes ten primary resources reflective of its early development as a cotton farm to its later adaption consistent with regional trends in agricultural diversification, including mid-20th century improvements in the dairy industry. The ten resources include eight buildings (the main house, a 1960s Ranch House, an L-Cottage, two large barns, a garage and open shed, and a 1950s milk house), a terraced agricultural field, and a historic cemetery. Two of the ten resources (#'s 9 and 10) are not located within the parent tract; however, they are historically associated with the farmstead, and contribute to its agricultural and developmental history.

II. GEOGRAPHIC LOCATION

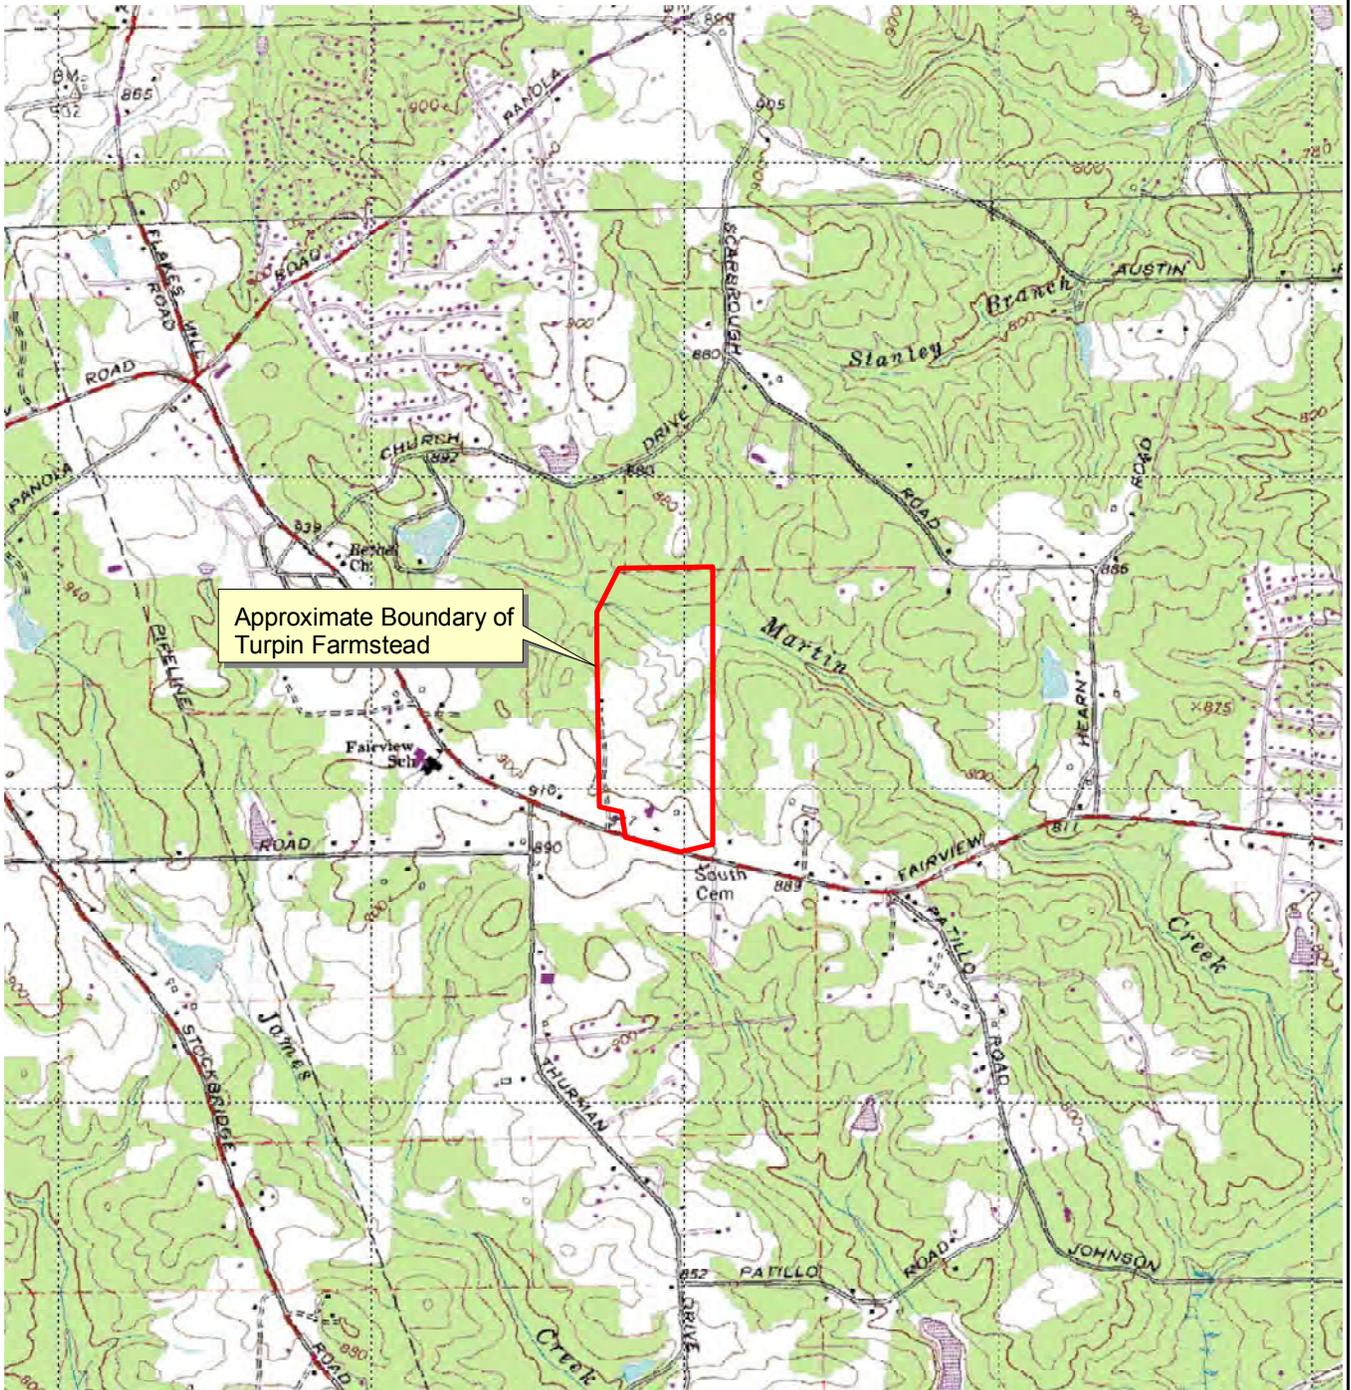

The Turpin Farmstead is located approximately 5 miles north of Stockbridge in Henry County. It is surrounded by residential and recreational development. Henry County is situated south of Atlanta in the north central portion of Georgia and is bounded by Dekalb County to the north, Newton and Rockdale Counties to the east, Butts and Spalding Counties to the south, and Clayton County to the west. Henry County currently encompasses 324 square miles, of which 323 square miles is land and 2 square miles is water.¹ Stockbridge, Georgia is located in the northwest portion of Henry County approximately 9 miles north of McDonough, the county seat. The city of Stockbridge was settled along Old Stagecoach Road in 1829.² Today, Stockbridge has a population of 23,000 and consists of residential, commercial, and industrial development.

The Turpin Farmstead is located along Fairview Road and is within the map limits of the 1964 (photorevised 1982) Stockbridge, GA USGS 7.5 Minute topographic map. Figures 1-3 show the approximate current boundary of the farmstead. The boundaries as shown are based on tax parcel maps, aerial photographs, and the owner interview. The Turpin Farmstead currently encompasses 78 acres and lies entirely within the 12th Land District, Land Lot 190. The tax parcel number is 045-01009000. Coordinates for the main house are N33.36'26.1", W-84.13'13.0".

III. HISTORICAL AND AGRICULTURAL OVERVIEW OF HENRY COUNTY

Henry County was established in 1821 by an act of the Georgia state legislature. The land consisted of territory ceded in the First Treaty of Indian Springs from the Creek Indian Confederation. The land was divided into large numbered squares called land districts, which were in turn divided into smaller numbered squares called land lots. The original county consisted of 70 square miles and 18 land districts encompassing parts of present day Newton, DeKalb, Fulton, Butts, Spalding, Clayton, and Rockdale Counties.<sup>3</sup>

Each original district was 9 square miles divided into 256 lots of 202.5 acres each. Over time the county was divided and now contains 8 of the original land districts, with only the 7th district remaining the full 9 square miles.<sup>4</sup>

By 1823, the centrally located town of McDonough was selected as the Henry County seat and named in honor of Commodore Thomas McDonough, hero of the Battle of Lake Champlain in the War of 1812. In 1827 McDonough boasted a courthouse, academy, post office, churches, commercial stores and several taverns and inns.<sup>5</sup>

The Turpin Farmstead is situated approximately 5 miles north of Stockbridge. The city of Stockbridge is named for Professor Levi Stockbridge, a local school teacher. The original community of Stockbridge, currently known as Old Stockbridge, dates back to the 1850s and then consisted of a post office and several scattered log cabins.<sup>6</sup> Unlike most southern towns focusing on progress during Reconstruction and the late 19th century, Stockbridge was resistant to discussions of potential railroads crossing cotton fields and entering the town. Many property owners demanded substantial payment from the railroads if their fields would in any way be impacted by railroad development. Others, specifically two gentlemen from Atlanta, saw an opportunity and quickly purchased property south of Old Stockbridge and sold it to the railroad.<sup>7</sup> Here, approximately 1 mile south of Old Stockbridge, a depot was constructed and the present town of Stockbridge quickly grew around it. The town was officially incorporated in 1895.

The agricultural history of Henry County falls more or less into three periods of Georgia agricultural history as defined in Tilling the Earth: Georgia's Historic Agricultural Heritage, A Context.<sup>8</sup> These eras include the following: 1) 1785-1865: Rice, King Cotton, and the Establishment of Staple Crops; 2) 1865-1920: the Postbellum Era, Cotton, and the Agrarian Revolution; and 3) 1920-1950: the Death of King Cotton and the Birth of Successful Agricultural Diversity. In some instances, it is evident that agricultural eras of Henry County deviate slightly from those outlined above in the dates of occurrence and/or trends. More specifically, Henry County's significant economic reliance on cotton resulted in later efforts for agricultural diversification than seen across the majority of the State. Therefore, the following sections provide an analysis of agricultural trends experienced in Henry County within the overall context of that of the State. In addition to the three agricultural eras defined in Tilling the Earth, a fourth period is included identifying modern trends affecting the future of agricultural practices in Henry County.

KING COTTON (1821-1865)

Like the majority of early settlers across the state, Henry County relied primarily on subsistence farming, growing tobacco, corn and other grains on small parcels of land. The Piedmont region of Georgia, including Henry County, boasted a combination of soil and climate that was considered highly suitable for the growth of cotton. As a result, and like so many other counties across the State, cotton was quickly established as the staple crop across Henry County.<sup>9</sup> Due to the rapid success of the cotton industry, agriculture was the leading economic activity throughout the County.

The first significant period of agriculture begins in 1821 with the formal establishment of Henry County and ends with the devastation of the Civil War. The success of the cotton industry of Antebellum Henry County was substantial compared to those of other Georgia counties. Based on court records, David Clements owned the first cotton gin in Henry County in 1841.<sup>10</sup> Family farms, large-scale plantations and merchants all profited from cotton production during the period. By the 1850s, the plantation system of farming based on slave labor was well-established in Henry County. During this time, 56 individuals in the county owned 20 or more slaves and 232 farm owners had labor forces ranging from 5 to 19 slaves.<sup>11</sup> "Small subsistence farmers who could, grew cotton, and planters, whose estates enjoyed the economic bounty King Cotton provided his subjects, expanded their landholdings through the acquisition of the land of farmers."<sup>12</sup> As such, the agricultural landscape of Henry County evolved to include small farmsteads, larger family owned operations, and even larger plantations. Regardless of the scale of operations, many, if not all, participated in the production of cotton. King Cotton was the most profitable economic staple in Henry County during this period and brick warehouses overflowing with cotton bales could be found throughout the county.<sup>13</sup>

Cotton production continued during wartime with the harvest used for uniforms and blankets for the southern army. In addition to cotton, other crops harvested from residents' lands became an important food source for Confederate soldiers, making Henry County a prime target for General Sherman and the Union army.<sup>14</sup> By 1864 Sherman's Army had begun their march to the sea. On November 16, 1864, the Union had reached McDonough by way of Stockbridge. Thereafter, with agricultural fields destroyed and slavery eradicated, Henry County was slow to recover.<sup>15</sup>

POSTBELLUM ERA, COTTON, AND THE AGRARIAN REVOLUTION (1865-1920)

The County faced tremendous economic struggles in the years immediately following the War. During Reconstruction, cotton planters throughout the State worked hard to recover and rebuild their cotton operations. The primary obstacle that planters faced in rebuilding their farms was the loss of slave labor. Newly freed, however, the former slaves had no land of their own and very little personal property. As a result, the large number of freedmen were in search of work. In many instances, the former slaves were competing for the same jobs as white farmers who lost their land and/or property during the War. The desire to rebuild the cotton industry resulted in the almost immediate replacement of the old system of planting based on slave labor with that of a crop-lien system of tenancy and sharecropping.

In a sharecropping system, a large land owner would subdivide a portion of their land into parcels that sharecroppers farmed for a share of the crop. “Tenant farmers, who usually owned some equipment or resources that placed them in a stronger bargaining position than sharecroppers, rented the land, maintaining control of the crop until ‘settling up’ with the landlords”.<sup>16</sup> Though both tenant farmers and sharecroppers experienced little debt relief, oftentimes propelling themselves into deeper debt due to the system’s reliance on a successful annual crop (i.e. cotton), the tenant farmer typically enjoyed a higher social status than that of the sharecropper. Despite the end of slavery, the southern States managed to adopt a new system of farming that allowed for the renewed production of cotton. With a predominantly black workforce back in the fields, and with cotton mills multiplying in the state, cotton again became the king of Georgia’s economy, particularly in Henry County.

While much of the old plantation regions of the state, including some areas of Henry County, became involved in the crop-lien system of agriculture, much of the County continued to consist of subsistence farms and small-mid sized, independent family-owned operations. Whichever type, scale, or system of farming was practiced, agriculture of the County had taken a drastic change as a result of the War. The old plantation system of agriculture was completely replaced with a crop-lien system of tenancy and sharecropping. Despite this Agrarian Revolution, Henry County managed to successfully revitalize the cotton industry on which its economy so heavily relied.

While the farmers, planters, and merchants once again profited from cotton production in the early postbellum years, many people “called for agricultural diversification in order to keep Georgia self-sufficient and economically secure.”<sup>17</sup> These individuals, including the Bourbons and the later, New South Progressives, recognized the risks involved in reliance on a sole product for economic subsistence, and promoted progress, industrial development including railroads and factories, as well as agricultural diversification. Efforts were made across the County to increase railroad accessibility, to establish industrial factories, and construct warehouses for storing and refining cotton products.

Despite a growing number of factories and warehouses, the economy of Henry County remained dependent upon the cotton industry. The many efforts between 1870 to 1900 across the state promoting agricultural diversification went unheeded by the majority of Henry County farmers due to the greater profitability of cotton production.<sup>18</sup> The farmers disregarded the advice for agricultural diversity. Those that did heed the advice, adopted agricultural practices including the production of livestock, lumber, oats, wheat, fruits and vegetables, etc. yet cotton remained king.<sup>19</sup>

The cotton boom continued throughout the 1890s and early 1900s as more businesses made their way to Henry County. Cotton acreage in Henry County reached a historic peak in 1919 with a total of 66,238 acres of cotton in production.<sup>20</sup>

DEATH OF KING COTTON AND THE BIRTH OF AGRICULTURAL DIVERSIFICATION (1920-1970)

Despite the continued success of the cotton industry in Henry County throughout the early years of the 20th century, it gradually became apparent to farmers that alternative agricultural practices were necessary in order to maintain their farms and livelihoods. The first and most significant turning point in the cotton industry of Henry County occurred in 1920 with the arrival of the boll weevil which destroyed the entire cotton harvest of that year. Due to its dependence on cotton production, the economy of Henry County quickly plummeted. Farmers who had yet to adopt the practice of agricultural diversification lost significant amounts of money with the loss of the an entire year of profits from the cotton harvest. These farmers were forced into tremendous debt as they tried to rebuild their farming operations. Some were forced to subdivide their farms.<sup>21</sup> The effects of the boll weevil were seen across the State. The reluctance of the majority of Henry County farmers to diversify likely contributed to the County experiencing a more significant and prolonged struggle than many other counties across the State throughout the 1920s.

Not yet recovered from the effects of the boll weevil, a second major blow to the agricultural recovery of Henry County was the Great Depression during the 1930s. The Depression prevented economic and agricultural recovery for yet another decade in Henry County. The continued reduction in size of farmsteads occurred and cotton production slowed. Yet, the cotton industry continued to remain the most profitable for Henry County throughout the 1930s and following decade. Due to the economic collapse caused by the boll weevil and the Great Depression, thousands of families relocated to nearby towns and cities. The population of Henry County, therefore, would continue to decline for the next two decades.<sup>22</sup>

In addition to the boll weevil and the Great Depression, soil erosion also contributed to the decline of cotton production from the 1920s onward. The combination of plantations, small farms, and eventually a crop-lien system degraded the land, eroding much of the state's fertile topsoil.<sup>23</sup> Henry County, a county so heavily reliant on cotton production and agriculture, experienced severe soil erosion. In the mid-1930s, a federal law established the Soil Conservation Service to curb extensive soil erosion. In 1937, soil conservation districts were established within the state of Georgia. These districts worked with the Soil Conservation Service to promote building of terraces and to provide soil conservation education.<sup>24</sup>

The process of terracing agricultural fields was first introduced in Georgia during the late 1860s and early 1870s when some farmers began to terrace their lands.<sup>25</sup> By the 1930s, with erosion so magnified, government efforts were underway to preserve Henry County farmsteads and the livelihoods of its citizens. By the 1950s, soil erosion was significantly decreased. However, by this time, cotton production in Henry County had greatly declined. Gins were dismantled across the county and agricultural patterns of Henry County began to rapidly change.

The devastation of the boll weevil, Great Depression, and soil erosion caused by cotton production finally forced Henry County farmers to reexamine the necessity of agricultural diversification. Although cotton remained the most profitable crop in Henry County through the 1960s, farm operations were finally diversifying and included the production of lumber, cattle, hay, pigs, dairy, vegetables, fruit, and chickens.

Major advancements in agricultural diversification occurred throughout the mid-20th century.

Important advancements in milking technology and equipment played a significant role in continued agricultural diversification of farmsteads throughout Henry County. Pipeline milking was introduced during the 1950s. This provided for cow's milk to be transported through a glass or stainless steel pipe by vacuum into the milk house where it was released into a bulk milk tank. The milk would be kept cool in the bulk tank until trucks arrived to transport the milk to market. This method of milk collection and processing improved the sanitation of the milk and provided a superior cooling system which allowed producers to store larger quantities of milk for longer periods of time.<sup>26</sup> Prior to these advancements, milk was collected in buckets, stored in individual bottles, and transported daily in small quantities.

By the end of the 1960s forestry was reported as Henry County's top agricultural industry with fifty-six percent of land in the county devoted to woodland.<sup>27</sup>

SUBURBANIZATION: POPULATION AND HOUSING BOOM (1970-PRESENT)

In 1969, Interstate I-75 opened to traffic through Henry County and by 1970 the population of Henry County, which had been in decline for the previous two decades, was back to numbers reminiscent of times before the boll weevil.<sup>28</sup> Between 1970 and 1990, as a result of metropolitan Atlanta suburban sprawl, the population of Henry County almost tripled.<sup>29</sup> This population growth caused a housing boom that continues to threaten agricultural land in Henry County today. While the mortgage/housing collapse of 2007/2008 has slowed the housing growth in recent years, Henry County farmsteads continue to face developmental pressures. Historic aerial photographs demonstrate the extensive encroachment upon agricultural lands in the immediate vicinity of the Turpin Farmstead (see Figures 6-8).

IV. THE TURPIN FARMSTEAD

The Turpin Farmstead is located at 707 Fairview Road approximately 5 miles north of Stockbridge, Georgia. The 78-acre property is located within Land Lot 190 of the 12th Land District of Henry County. In addition, the property is located on the border of the Brushy Knob and Shakerag Militia Districts.<sup>30</sup>

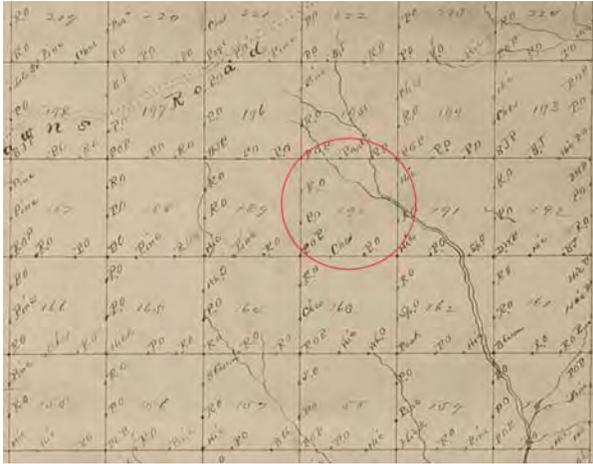

Figure 9: Henry County, District 12. 1866, District Plats of Survey, Survey Records, Survey or General, RG 3-324, Georgia Archives

The farmstead is rectangularly shaped, occupying lands north of Fairview Road (former Atlanta-McDonough Road). The property features a gently rolling landscape. Fences run the full length of the North, East, and West boundary. Fences also partition the property into homestead, meadows, vegetated creek beds, and terraced field. Fence rows are evident on recent aerial photography and divide the homestead and yard from the fields. This is evident on recent aerial photography. The topography of the property slopes from Fairview Road north toward Martin Creek.

The homestead, including the main house (Resource #1), garage (Resource #2) and open shed (Resource #3), as well as associated outbuildings, including the milk house (Resource #4) and Mule Barn (Resource #5), are situated near a high point toward the southern portion of the property along Fairview Road common to historic farmsteads across the state. An abandoned dirt road traverses along the western edge of the property and leads to the L-Cottage (Resource #7) situated just within the western property line and near the meadow edge. Portions of the road still exist, however, much of the road is overgrown with vegetation. A path, lined with fence posts and wire, runs from the eastern entrance of the Pole Barn (Resource #6) around the yard to the rear of the Mule Barn (Resource #5). The portion of the property located north of Martin Creek is densely wooded. The driveway leading to the Main House is nearly straight, leading directly from Fairview Road to the attached carport. It is worth noting that historic aerial photographs show the driveway as semi-circular.

Agricultural outbuildings, with the exception of the Pole Barn, are located relatively close to the Main House, typical of farmsteads across Georgia. The Main House is shaded with large deciduous trees including one large pecan tree.

On a 2-acre tract of land located adjacent to the southwest corner of the property, and still owned by the Turpin family, is the Ranch House (Resource #9). Along the western edge of these 2 acres lies the former dirt road which leads to the L-Cottage (Resource #7).

The South-Pattillo Family Cemetery (Resource #10) is located south of the farmstead along Fairview Road and contains markers of members of both families dating back to the late 1700s. These families particularly the South's, played a significant role in the development of the farmstead.

The most notable agricultural landscape feature on the property is the one remaining terraced field located northwest of the homestead. The 1939 through 2010 historical aerial photographs show the field as terraced. Historically, the field was one of several irregularly arranged contour terraced fields. Consistent with characteristic terraced farms across the state, the majority of Turpin Farmstead was terraced along existing contour lines in 1939. It appears each terraced field was designed to retain topsoil, and to carry water slowly downhill to Martin Creek. It is unknown whether any terracing occurred during the late 19th century during the cotton years, or if it was a result of efforts in the 1930s to prevent soil erosion.

Today, the sole agricultural practice on the property is production of hay which is stored in the Pole Barn.

DEVELOPMENTAL HISTORY

The earliest record referring to the land on which the homestead is situated is a deed dated July 19, 1827 (Deed Book A, Page 550). The deed makes reference to the original land grant of 202.5 acres to Nimrod Rages<sup>31</sup> and dated July 1, 1822. The acreage included all lands within Land Lot 190. According to the deed, the land was conveyed by Nimrod Rages to John S. Holt prior to the 1827 conveyance of the property to Isaac R. St. John (See Appendix C for a Chain-of-Title and associated deed records).

Issac R. St. John, "a New York Gentleman, and his wife, Mary" retained the property until 1840 when it was conveyed to Joseph D. Beers (Deed Book J, Page 823). Six years later, Joseph Beers conveyed the property to John South on March 7, 1846 (Deed Book L, Page 29). The use of the property during this time is unknown; however, the original 202.5 acres of land remained intact despite multiple transfers of ownership between 1822 and 1846.

The South Family retained ownership of the property for almost fifty years. It was during the South Family ownership that the agricultural history of the property began to take shape. Prior to this date, no surviving records indicate that development of the property had occurred. Furthermore, a historic map study yields little information pertaining to development on or surrounding the 202.5-acre lot.

The South-Pattillo Family Cemetery (Resource #10) is located south of the Turpin Farmstead, across Fairview Road, and within Land Lot 163 at the northern boundary of said lot. Although having never been included in the 202.5-acre original tract of land, the cemetery suggests that John South and his family also owned land located within Lot 163, immediately south of Lot 190. Based on this information, it is likely that South acquired considerable acreage in the area and was likely operating a large-scale family farm during the mid to late-19th century.<sup>32</sup>

Census records indicate that John South (b. 1796), son of William South, was residing at his birthplace in Laurens, South Carolina in 1830 at the age of 34 (See Appendix C for census records). By 1840, like so many others in search of new opportunities, John South left the Carolinas, venturing into Georgia, and settled in Henry County. According to the 1840 census, John South was residing in Henry County and was head of a household of 7 individuals, including one slave. Six years later, John South acquired the 202.5-acre parcel in Land Lot 190 in which the Turpin Farmstead is situated.

The 1840 to 1860 census records indicate that John South, farmer, was head of a household of a total of 6 to 7 individuals. The value of his real estate in 1850 was approximately $5,000 and $5,925 in 1860. The number of slaves owned by John South (1 in 1840, and 5 in 1850) indicates that the farmstead was expanding and requiring additional laborers for crop production. The purchase of the 202.5 acres of land (Land Lot 190) in 1846 further attests to the rapid expansion of the South's farming operation. While an 1860 slave schedule indicates the presence of one slave house, it is unknown in which lot of land the slave house was situated. There is no surviving above-ground evidence on the existing Turpin Farmstead suggesting the former presence of a slave house. Based on the success of the cotton industry in the county during the mid-19th century, it is likely that John South had a well-established cotton farm at the outbreak of the Civil War.

The South family farmstead probably experienced similar hardships in the wake of the Civil War as other small farmsteads and large plantations within Henry County. The established system of farming based on free slave labor was eradicated. However, unlike the majority of farmers who were forced to subdivide their property, it appears that John South managed to hold the majority of his land including land within Lot 163 as well as the entire 202.5-acre parcel of Lot 190.

The 1870 census demonstrates a diminished household, consisting of John South, wife, and a black "domestic servant."<sup>33</sup> The record also lists John South as a farmer, most likely reestablishing cotton production on his farmstead until his death in 1891.

There is no indication that South is responsible for any of the buildings surviving within the current 73-acre property. He may have utilized the entirety of Land Lot 190 primarily for the production of cotton and/or various other crops. Also unknown is whether South introduced contour terracing during his cotton operations.

Following his death in 1891, his executors began the first large-scale subdivision of his lands. The continued use of the cemetery through the early 1900s suggests that the South family maintained ownership of at least a portion of Lot 163 through the early-20th century.<sup>34</sup> The 202.5-acres of Lot 190, however, experienced two large subdivisions during this time. According to Deed Book 1, Pages 31-32, between 1891 (death of John South) and March 31, 1893 (date of deed), 4.5 acres of land located at the southwest corner of Lot 190 was granted to James Henry and M.D. Ford. Another 67.5 acres of land from the east side of Lot 190 was conveyed to R.J. Carrall. By subdivision, the original 202.5-acre lot of land was reduced to 130 acres by 1893.

The above-referenced deed, (Book 1, Pages 31-32), dated March 31, 1893, conveys the 130-acre parcel of land in Lot 190 to Newton and J.N. Willingham. During the short period of time that the Willingham family owned the property (1893-1905), an additional small subdivision of the land occurred. A 2-acre parcel located at the southwest corner of the property was parceled off between 1896 and 1905 when the remaining 128 acres was conveyed to Morris Coleman White.<sup>35</sup>

Morris Coleman White (b. 1858) acquired the 128-acre portion of Land Lot 190 on December 18, 1905. Research suggests that the Main House (Resource 1) was constructed during the early years of ownership by M.C. White. In 1921, M.C. White deeded 73 acres of this land to C.C. White.<sup>36</sup>

<sup>34</sup> Deed research of Land Lot 163 was not conducted for purposes of this report. However, the presence of the South Family Cemetery and interview with the current property owner, Ronald Turpin, indicate that the land south Fairview Road (Land Lot 163) was formerly that of John South.

The 73-acre parcel remained in the White family for almost 50 years.

Figure 11 is a diagram demonstrating the approximate subdivision of the original 202.5-acre parcel encompassing all of land Lot 190 into the 73-acre parcel on which the Turpin Farmstead is situated.<sup>37</sup> Figure 12 is a 1939 historic aerial photograph identifying the landscape features that are most likely remnants of the original boundaries of the 202.5-acre Land Lot 190. The aerial photograph also shows features of the farmstead depicting its development and use during the White family ownership.

In addition to the main house, the White family are likely responsible for the construction of the mule barn (Resource 5) and the L-Cottage (Resource 7) located within the existing 73-acre parcel. Based on an interview with Ronald Turpin, the L-Cottage was initially constructed as a sharecropper cottage. The 1939 aerial photograph is the earliest documentation showing these three resources. According to Mr. Turpin, rumors abound that the sharecropping families residing in the L-Cottage occupied their time during the fall and winter months with the production of “white liquor” on the property.

The terracing of the various fields, as visible in the 1939 aerial photograph, appears to be deliberately contoured to drain toward the creeks traversing the property. Based on the agricultural history of Henry County during this period, as well as the property owner interview, it is likely that cotton production was the predominant agricultural operation on the farmstead during the early- to mid-20th century.<sup>38</sup> Furthermore, deed records indicate that lands to the south (Land Lot 163), likely formerly owned by John South, were also acquired by C. C. White. The 1939 aerial photograph demonstrates significant contoured terracing within land Lot 163 as well. Thus, it can be presumed that Morris White and C.C. White were likely successful cotton farmers, operating a family-run farmstead within both land lots during the early to mid-20th century.

In 1948, the executors of the estate of C.C. White relinquished the 73-acre parcel, deeding it to Clyde M. Turpin, whose wife was an extended descendant of the White Family. Shortly following the acquisition of the property, Clyde Turpin set out to establish a successful working farmstead. The idea of agricultural diversification was a popular trend during the mid-20th century in Henry County. As such, Turpin attempted to steer away from relying solely on cotton production. According to Ronald Turpin, Clyde Turpin continued the production of cotton, but also produced corn and produce until 1954. Advancements within the dairy industry during the 1950s provided Turpin with an excellent opportunity for agricultural diversity. In 1956, Turpin established his property as a working dairy farm, constructing the milk house and metal silos (Resource 4).<sup>39</sup> According to Ronald Turpin, the L-Cottage that once housed sharecropping families, was later used as a dwelling for a family assisting the Turpin’s with daily operations of the dairy farm.

Just as so many farmers throughout the county slowed the production of cotton during the mid to late-20th century, the evolving landscape of the Turpin Farmstead as depicted in the historic aerial photographs reveals similar trends. While the 1939 aerial photograph reflects substantial terraced fields likely due to extensive cotton production and the resulting soil erosion, subsequent aerial photographs demonstrate the gradual diminishment of the contoured terraces. The majority of the fields within the farmstead were utilized for livestock grazing during the period of dairy farming. A single contoured, terraced field survives on the farmstead (Resource 8) as an indicator of several decades of cotton production resulting in soil erosion. In addition, the L-Cottage serves as a reminder of the Agrarian Revolution and the transition from plantation farming to a crop-lien system of agriculture during the postbellum era and early-20th century. The property is reflective of the common evolution of farmsteads in Henry County from the original 202.5-acre land lot to smaller, family-owned farmstead operations. It is indicative of the growth and decline of the cotton industry and the establishment of agricultural diversification.

<sup>38</sup> Based on the interview with Ronald Turpin, he has no knowledge of agricultural practices on the farmstead prior to 1948; however, he feels strongly that the production of cotton occurred throughout the early-20th century, if not earlier.

In 2002, the property was deeded to Ronald M. Turpin, who continues to maintain the property. According to Mr. Turpin, dairy operations ceased June 1980. The production of hay continues.

BUILDINGS AND RESOURCES

The Turpin Farmstead consists of a total of 8 standing structures: the main house (Resource 1), a garage with open shed (Resource 2), an open post shed (Resource 3), a milk house with associated silos (Resource 4), a mule barn (Resource 5), a pole barn (Resource 6), an L-cottage (Resource 7), and a Ranch House (Resource 9). A small surviving portion of the historic terraced fields serves as Resource 8. Lastly, the South-Pattillo Family Cemetery located south of Fairview Road is Resource 10. Although Resources 9 and 10 are not located within the existing parent tract, they are both associated with the historic farmstead and each provide valuable information pertaining to its developmental history and people who contributed to the agricultural history of Henry County. The following section provides a brief description of each of the 10 resources associated with the Turpin Farmstead, its evolution, and its agricultural history. Additional photographs of each resource are provided in Appendix D. A photograph log and sketch map identifying photograph orientations are also included in Appendix D.

Resource 1: The Main House, c. 1900

Photograph 5: Front (South) Façade of Resource 1

The main house of the Turpin Farmstead reflects the late-19th to early-20th century development of the property. The one and a half-story, side-gabled cottage is similar in form to a central hallway cottage of the late-19th century with one room deep; however, the hallway is slightly off-centered with unequal rooms on either side. The original, rectangular structure features an exterior field stone chimney at each gable end. The top portions of the chimneys are red brick with a corbelled brick tapering of the flue. An apparent early-to-mid-20th century one-story, hipped ell addition extends northwesterly from the rear of the principal massing. A large, mid- to late-20th century recessed shed addition is located in the rear ell. A modern recessed, side-gabled carport extends from the right end of the principal massing. The entire house, including additions, rests on a brick foundation. A brick apron with sill surrounds the house and all additions. All roofing is asphalt shingles. The house is clad with vinyl siding with the front façade (south) featuring vertical vinyl.

The front façade is three bays featuring a tripartite picture window on the left, an entry door, and paired windows on the right. The front porch is centrally located with a shed roof supported by four square columns. The entry door is a modern replacement, paneled door. Primary windows of the principal, side-gabled portion of the structure are 6 over 6, double-hung, metal sash. A single window is situated on either side of each chimney on both the first floor and ½-story. Thus, a total of four windows are located at each end of the principal massing.

The rear ell is one bay wide, three bays deep and features the same primary window fenestration as the principal massing. The modern rear shed addition features one over one metal sash windows. This addition is two bays wide and four bays deep with an entry door situated on the east façade.

Resource 2: Garage and Open Shed, c. 1970

Photograph 6: Front (Southwest) Façade of Resource 2

The front-gabled, two-unit garage faces southeast and is constructed of concrete block. The garage, erected c. 1970, features clapboard in the gables and several open shed additions supported by wood posts surrounding the garage. The roof of the garage is covered with asphalt shingles. The open shed roofing is corrugated metal. Agricultural equipment is stored under the shed roofing.

Resource 3: Open Shed, c. 1975

Photograph 7: Northwestern View of Resource 3

The open equipment shed features a metal gabled roof supported by wooden posts. The rear (north) elevation is clad with standing seam metal. Agricultural equipment is stored beneath the shed.

Resource 4: Milk House and Silos, 1956

Photograph 8: Front (South) Façade of Resource 4

The milk house and metal grain silos were erected in 1956 by Clyde M. Turpin shortly after he acquired the property from C.C. White in 1948. The construction of the milk house during this period not only coincides with efforts of agricultural diversification in the region but also with the improvements in milking equipment and the cooling and transportation of milk during the 1950s.

The Turpin Milk House is a one-story, ell-shaped, concrete block structure with a corrugated metal gabled roof. The front façade faces south and consists of five bays: a door, a primary entry door, window, window, and a single, front gabled bay extension. The windows are original six over six, double hung sash within a wooden frame. The left entry features a simple wooden door of vertical flush board. The primary entry door is original with six rectangular lights (missing panes) and horizontal panel below. Below this panel are remnants of a larger square panel. The exterior, concrete block walls are painted white; however, there is evidence of earlier teal color paint.

Upon entering the milk house, a paneled door leads to a small workroom on the right. The primary room consists of original milking and transfer pipeline equipment, despite substantial rusting. Some of the walls reveal white paint. The surviving equipment suggests that cows were milked within the building as opposed to outdoor stalls. The cows were apparently attached directly to the milking vacuum and pipelines. An interior rear door leads to an exterior holding area for the cows. This area features a shed roof supported by wooden posts. According to the property owner, Ronald Turpin, the milk house contained large, stainless steel bulk tanks when in operation. Two large metal silos are located directly east of the milk house and utilized as grain silos.

Resource 5: Mule Barn, c. 1930

Photograph 9: Northeasterly View of Resource 5

The one-and-a-half-story frame mule barn features a front (south) facing gable and a central runway extending then length of the building. A hay loft/workshop is situated in the space beneath the gable. An inspection of the interior of the structure as well as construction materials suggests that the original historic massing was a long, single crib barn resting on a foundation of stacked field stone. According to the property owner, the mule barn was constructed during the 1930s.

Today, the original single crib barn demonstrates an incremental growth with the construction of multiple extensions, additions, and open sheds. An apparent alteration is the extension of the gable to the east. Under the extended roof, to the east of the central runway, is a stairwell leading to the hay loft as well as two full-length cribs and multiple smaller cribs utilized for storage and hay. An open shed addition is located on either side of the principal massing, and another located in the front (south).

Resource 6: Pole Barn, c. 1960

Photograph 10: Interior View of Resource 6

The c. 1960 pole barn features a front (west) facing gable with a corrugated metal roof supported by a framework of upright poles set directly into the ground – an efficient and economical construction method of barns during this period. The structure is a single bay with a large, full length entry opening at either end. The exterior walls are partially clad with corrugated metal. The interior space is a single, large unit and utilized for the storage of hay bales. Unique to this structure is a shed extension along the full length of the north façade. Similar to a bank barn, this section of the barn is situated along the side of a small hill permitting direct access at a lower level than that of the principal massing. An open shed with metal roof supported by round wood posts extends westward from the pole barn.

Resource 7: L-Cottage, c. 1900

The one-story frame, L-Cottage is located near the rear of the farmstead along the western property line. The dwelling is a former sharecropper cottage likely constructed during the early-20th century. Various sharecropping families resided in the house throughout the early-to-mid-20th century. When the property became a dairy farm in 1956, the family residing in the L-Cottage assisted with the maintenance of the farm, livestock, and dairy production. The dwelling later housed the sister-in-law of Ronald Turpin until 1992.

The structure has been vacant for several years and access not permissible. In addition, the house is surrounded by heavy vegetation and barbed wire obstructing much of the view of the structure. Despite minimal visibility, the basic form of the structure is discernable. In addition, historic aerial photographs aid in the documentation of the building.

The house appears to be a gabled, L-Cottage with an asphalt shingled roof, weatherboard siding, and rests on an apparent brick pier with infill concrete block foundation. It appears that the front façade faces west. Historic aerial photographs indicate that a dirt road running along the west property line led directly to the house. A portion of this road survives today.

A rear shed addition is located within the ell at the southeast corner of the house. An electric utility line runs to the cottage indicating that its occupants at one time enjoyed the convenience of electricity.

Resource 8: Terraced Agricultural Fields

Photograph 11: Southeasterly View of Terraced Fields (Resource 8)

As previously discussed, historic aerial photographs indicate that the Turpin farmstead had a well-established terraced landscape as late as 1939. By this date, the majority of the property consisted of terraced agricultural fields. Over the next seventy years, the terraced fields began disappearing as the dairy industry became the predominant agricultural practice of the farm during the 1950s. All that remains of the former, contoured terraced fields is a small portion located behind the pole barn (Resource 6) near the center of the property. The grass and terraces are well-maintained, stepping down toward a small creek to the north.

Resource 9: Ranch House, 1965

Photograph 12: Northeastly View of Resource 9

Constructed in 1965, the one-story, rectangular-shaped Ranch House is frame construction with a brick veneer and rests on a brick foundation. The low-pitched, side-gabled roof features asphalt shingles. The front (south) façade is nine bays consisting of a carport with two windows, followed by four windows, a door, and three additional windows. Primary windows are six over nine, double-hung sash with white shutters. An interior brick chimney is situated along the ridge. An entry porch features a gabled roof supported by round, wood columns. This structure is an excellent example of a Georgia Ranch House.

The 2-acre parent tract on which the Ranch House is situated was deeded to the current property owner, Mr. Ronald and Carolyn Turpin on December 22, 1992 as a “family gift” (Deed Book 4771, Page 60). The parcel was once part of the original 202.5-acre parcel of land. As previously discussed, it was subdivided from the principal property during the ownership of J.N. Willingham and deeded to a family member. When the 73-acre farmstead was acquired by the White Family, and later inherited by the Turpin Family, the small 2-acre parcel was also transferred to the respective families. As such, the 2-acre parcel continues to be associated with the farmstead as a whole, as well as to the families that contributed to its development and preservation. Furthermore, the Ranch House, constructed in 1965, demonstrates the continued evolution of the farmstead as the 2-acre parcel developed into a small, family homestead. The current residents of the Ranch House are family friends of the Turpin’s who once resided in the L-Cottage (Resource 7) and assisted with the dairy farm.

Resource 10: South-Pattillo Family Cemetery

Photograph 13: Grave marker of John South (b. 1796-d. 1891)

The South-Pattillo Family Cemetery is located south of the current Turpin Farmstead, across Fairview Road (Atlanta-McDonough Road), near the northern boundary of Land Lot 163. Although never having been included in the 202.5-acre original tract of land, the cemetery suggests that John South and his family also owned land located within Lot 163, immediately south of Lot 190.<sup>40</sup> Based on this information, it is likely that John South was operating a large-scale family farm during the mid to late-19th century.

The cemetery is accessed from the south side of Fairview Road. Concrete curbing surrounds the south and west sides of the cemetery. The cemetery consists of 8 marked graves and approximately 17 unidentified graves. Individuals interred in the cemetery include those of the South and Pattillo families. The earliest marker is that of John South (b. 1796 – d.1891). John South acquired the original farmstead of approximately 202 acres in 1846 (Deed Book L, Page 29) and retained ownership until his death in 1891. Other family members interred in the cemetery include Lilla Pattillo (b. 1866 – d.1894), Magnolia Pattillo (b. 1887 – d.1901), Newton South (b. 1836 – d.1902), J. H. W. M South (b. 1833 – d. 1902), Infant Daughter, Pattillo (b. 1905 – d. 1905), Nancy South (b. 1845 – d. 1907) and Joel B. South (b. 1878-d. 1907).

Markers in the cemetery include two, modest concrete box tombs. The marker of John South is a simple limestone headstone of which the top half has broken off and currently leans against its base. A relatively short, approximately 4 feet in height, obelisk marks the grave of J. H. W. M. South. The grave of the Pattillo Infant Daughter features decorative curbing and a detailed headstone with the image of hand reaching from the sky grasping a dove. The “hand coming down” often represents the presence of the almighty and the dove is a symbol of purity and peace.<sup>41</sup> A decorative iron fence surrounds a small plot containing approximately four graves.

VI. CONCLUSION

The Turpin Farmstead survives as a representative example of the evolution of agricultural trends of Henry County from the mid-19th century to the late-20th century. The property not only reflects the county’s reliance on cotton production for over 100 years, it also demonstrates the patterns of land subdivision common among farmsteads over time, the Agrarian Revolution, and agricultural diversification. Surviving resources and the landscape of the property reflect the evolution of a family farmstead in Henry County throughout the 20th century. In particular, the farmstead demonstrates the necessity to adopt new agricultural trends while taking advantage of advancements in farming technologies. With threats of encroaching neighborhoods, the Turpin Farmstead remains one of a few surviving reminders of the important agricultural history of Henry County and the struggles faced by those who relied so heavily upon the land .

<sup>40</sup> Ronald Turpin also indicated his understanding that the South Family once owned the lot south of Fairview Road.

The deed makes reference to a plat survey made for C.S. Pattillo Talmon dated 10/1915.                                                                                                                                   |

The deed makes reference to a plat survey made for C.S. Pattillo Talmon dated 10/1915.                                                                                                                                   |
| 10/8/1921             | M.C. White             | C.C. White                          | 18/504                  | Conveyance of 73 acres of land from the east side of the former 128-acre parcel. The deed indicates the 73-acre parcel is located within the middle of Land Lot 190. It references the "Atlanta-McDonough Public Road" located south of the lot, and an old abandoned road to the west. |
| 12/18/1905            | J.N. Willingham        | M.C. White                          | 6/384                   | Conveyance of approximately 128 acres. It appears that the small, 2-acre parcel located at the southwest corner of the current lot was subdivided during the ownership of J.N. Willingham sometime between 1896 and 1905.                                                               |

 advanced age, but of sound and disposing mind and memory and knowing that I must shortly depart this life deem it right and proper both as regards myself and family to make such disposition of the property with which a kind Providence has blessed me with as I deem best to make this my last Will and Testament revoking all others.
 I desire that at my death my body shall be buried in a decent and Christian like manner,
